

What other strategies have worked for your family?

Give us some more things to try!

TD WALL NOV 04, 2018 02:39PM

Not engaging in the tantrum

Let them mess up

A file folder for homework labeled by subject.

Encouragement and consequences when homework does not get finished

Forcing her to stop and take a small break (snack, bath, listen to music)

Break big problems into small chunks/ milestones

Letting go and stepping in when asked

Patience

Agenda checks

Physical activity...for boys

Let them fail occasionally when the stakes are low! There's no better teacher than failure!

Homework First

Reminder Lists for checking PowerSchool, Canvas, agenda, Remind

Desk in downstairs common

They plan out their week and how to tackle big projects each day. They also make their own quizlets to prepare for tests.

Allotted video time after homework is done

Remove electronic distractions

All homework done before electronics

Keep reminding them to get their homework done.

Agenda check with reward if nightly homework is written in

Not expecting perfection

Patience and encouragement

Bringing a cup of warm tea and snack during studying when I hear her getting stressed/frustrated. Helps her to relax

"Chill out" time right after school for about an hour, then homework time. Unless it's a sports day, and then we're usually doing homework late night. :(

Homework downstairs in the kitchen not in bedroom - keeps her focused. Take breaks to practice piano or hit some lax wall ball in the backyard. If getting frustrated with a given assignment, set aside and switch gears and come back.

General verbal reminders about any upcoming work/assignments, decrease distractions

Give them a specific place to work without distraction from phone, ipad or TV.

Dry erase board they fill in with assignments every Sunday when teacher sends out weekly updates.

Time w friends is after work is done

My child know that she won't be allowed to go to the mall or hang out w friends unless all her work is done.

*****